
Title: Other Tongues

Author: Tomek Wroclow

When in Brittania, one would normally speak the tongue of the land, Brittanian. But oft, many people do not hail from this fine land, therefore Brittanian may become useless in trade or war. There are many different languages spoken, and those being discussed are not of Brittanian lands. The most prevalent tongues are those of the Germanic Provinces and the Woiwodes of the Eastern Provinces. The Germanic tongues are very similar to the Brittanian language, and does not take a scholar to learn simple words. The language is a very rough and unattractive one, but a useful tool in conflict and trade. The basic sounds are as follows:
